about fifty pickpockets, now the police reports show that their number has reached four thousand in the metropolis alone, and about ten thousand in the rest of France. These figures are nearly doubled at times of reviews, races, popular fetes, and exhibitions by recruits from abroad. But, singularly enough, they all come or have been trained in Great Brituin. England is the cradle and hothed of pickpockets. It is a profession as firmly established as carpentering or bricklaying; it has its apprentices, graduates, professors, experts, and commercial agents. Novices are taught to distinguish a Frenchman from a native, a Russian from a German, a South American from an Italian; are made acquainted with the slight but all important differences in each nationality in the cut of the clothes, the place of the pockets, the mode of carrying jewelry, watches, purses, or loose cash.

When the pupils are supposed to have profited sufficiently by their education, they are dispatched at Christmas time to a certain suburb of London, where they are farmed out. The agent, who has come to select a trio, puts them through their paces, and if they acquit themselves creditably he engages them, gives them clothes, board and special instructions, and takes them abroad to ply their trade under his management. As soon, however, as their personality has become inconveniently familiar to the police of the locality, they are returned and exchanged for a fresh set, under the same

A sharp and observant person might detect the pickpocket who shadows him with evil intent by the peculiar roving restlessness of the eye, of which even the most experienced ones cannot entirely divest themselves. The habit is contracted at the onset of their careers; imperative then, it becomes inveterate, The pickpocket embraces at a glance the particular article in a shop window calculated to attract the passerby, the conformation of the victim's pockets, the foot passengers around him and the quarter from which his bugbear, the "Bobby," is likely to appear. In each country the profession retains its own particular methods. The Spaniard, like the South American, does not attempt to operate save in a tolerably thick crowd; the Italian works generally only on ladies, and badly, because he is too precipitate; the Turk is fearless, awkward, audacious, and even in the clutches of the police, with one hand pinioned, attempts to steal with the other. The French make a specialty of 'recognition," which is effected by one pal affecting to recognize in some innocent, rustic looking individual a relation or old friend, effusively falling on his The Big Crowd on its An. or her neck: while the error is explained and apologies offered the deed is done by an associate. The most dangerous of that species is the becotcuse, usually a young and very pretty girl, who rushes into the arms of a benevolent old man, kisses him on both cheeks and calls him "uncle," a relationship he will have good cause to remember, as it has cost him all his portable property. The utter carelessness of the public facilitates the operations of the pickpockets to a degree which has often dicited from them expressions of withering contempt. To supplement the legend Where the grandest display which bids people beware of them, the authorities would do well to affix a few simple rules, the observance of which would be an effective protection.-London Cor. Mr. Lehman is suffering from a form of paresis, and although be is but 42 years old there is not the slightest hope of his recovery. He lives like a king in his apartments, and his family pay for the luxuries with royal liberality.

He has three apartments, which occu-py all the right side of the house on the ower floor. For these rooms and board alone he pays $150 a week. Then he has three special attendants who keep with him night and day. These cost $42 a week additional.

He keeps his horses and carriages and rides out once a day. One of the attendants does the driving, while the other two sit on either side of him. For the many other luxuries he enjoys Mr. Lehman pays out in all $400 a week. He pays more than any other inmate of the While at times he is quiet and pleas ant Mr. Lehman is one of the wildest men in the asylum when an insane fit strikes him. It is because of this that it is necessary to keep three attendants watching him. He has smashed thousands of dollars' worth of furniture since his incarceration. He is a tall, athletically built man, and is possessed of enormous strength when he becomes wild. Although his three attendants are all trained athletes they have great difficulty in holding him at times.

While he sleeps in one of the small ooms an attendant sits at his bedside and watches all night, while the other two sleep in the large room a few feet distant.

In addition to the usual iron gratings on the windows several strong bars have been placed. Several times a week the Chicago millionaire tries to break out of the rooms. He has almost wrenched the iron gratings from their places, and on one occasion almost succeeded in climbing up the wall to the glass transom above the top of the door and breaking through. To guard against a repetition of this the glass has been removed and wooden boards have been nailed in its

About once a month Mr. Lehman's wife comes on from Chicago to see her husband. Sometimes she brings one of her four children with her. She is not permitted to speak to him or allow him to see her.

While she stands in one part of the grounds he is driven past her in his carriage, and in this way she is enabled to catch a brief glimpse of his face.

In his rational moments Mr. Lehman talks to his attendants about his wife and children. He says that he has the sweetest family in the world and that they all love him.

In his parlor Mr. Lehman has a handomely carved organ. He is very fond of music and is a musician of no insignificant skill. He plays upon the organ at times half the day and completely enchants the other inmates of the house. -New York Journal.

A Fortune from Beans and Beef.

Oliver Hitchcock, the Park row beans and beef man, has made more money from the sale of the two articles of diet mentioned than any man in the world. His fortune is estimated to be $750,000. He is said to own considerable stock in the New York Central railroad and to have a large sum invested in bonds and mortgages. He is a remarkably sturdy man for his age—he being 74 years old. Every day finds him behind his counter, at the corner of Beekman street, slicing the juicy cornbeef or ladling out the Beston vegetable. He works only four hours a day now.

Mr. Hitchcock began selling beef and taurant. Horace Greeley was one of Hitchcock's regular customers. Hitchcock cannot remember why he made a specialty of beef and beans, but he has tangible evidence that if these articles are properly cooked and decently served they will bring a handsome remuneration.-New York Journal.

Electric Lights in a Theatre. An electrician who visited the Lyric theatre in London, where a very complete electrical installation has been put in for theatrical purposes, says that the arrangements on the stage are perfect, and he has never seen any theatre in which the light from the batters can be varied both in intensity and color to so great an exteat and with such ease. No limelights are used, the necessary effects being produced by portable are lamps. There is not a single gas jet anywhere on or near the stage, and the plant has run for twenty-one months without the slightest breakdown.-London Letter.

We can make noses to order, either of vulcanized rubber or plaster paris. They are a good substitute, but of course the nerves are not there. I had a case once of a minister who had fallen into the fire, and had had that useful member burned off. We also have appliances for changing the shape of the nose. A Roman nose can be reduced by gradual pressure to a fine aquiline, and the whole face can be remodeled by an iron mask. This mask is worn only at night.-Interview in Cincinnati Times-Star.
